University Website Academic Program Pages Transition to Leveraging Catalog Content

Division of Academic Affairs
Division of University Communications and Marketing
Division of Information Technology

Why?

- To ensure curriculum accuracy across the university as a commitment to our students and to meet legal mandates

Current State of Communicating Curriculum

Multiple Sources = Low Accuracy

CourseLeaf Software is the official repository of approved curriculum:

- Program requirements
- Admission criteria
- Course information

College, department, school and campus websites:

- Decentralized maintenance
- No oversight on information published on curriculum

The Rationale & Challenges

- Rationale
 - Keep web visitors and future students on department web pages
 - Ability to add custom content
- Challenges
 - Duplicate content
 - Outdated and eventually inaccurate content
 - Orphaned pages
 - Compliance issues

Compliance Issue

- During the reauthorization of Kent State's Program Participation Agreement for continued eligibility for federal financial aid, the U.S. Department of Education documented inconsistencies in how program requirements (including graduation GPA) were being shared on Kent State University academic web pages.
- On our public websites, some colleges link to the catalog to see program requirements and some have the information posted on their own pages.
 - Based on the audit from Department of Education, there is concern that this information does not always match.
 - An internal audit found more than 70 KSU webpages with embedded curriculum and other graduation requirements.

Examples

Solution - API Integration with Catalog

All departmental websites will pull information directly from this SINGLE OFFICIAL SOURCE

Benefits:

- No duplicated content
- Assurance that information across websites is consistent and accurate
- Updates automatically each year when new catalog is published, reducing edits for webmasters
- Users stay on the department website rather than transfer out to catalog site
