Greetings Members of the Cultural Geography Specialty Group!

In David Bowie's song Changes, from his 1971 album Hunky Dory, he suggests that we confront both personal and societal changes rather than ignore them. While his focus seems to be on the transition from childhood to adulthood, the message is clear in his words, "turn and face the strange" (or "strain" in some translations). Change has been on my mind quite a lot recently, related to both my personal and professional life. In some cases, I have turned to face it, but other times, I've ignored it or attempted to delay the inevitable.

As I get older, my hair is turning gray, which I have not accepted, and have chosen to delay this instead. Unfortunately, I couldn't keep my boys at home forever, and they are now both in college. Recently, a beloved pet, my yellow Labrador retriever, died from colon cancer. With the house becoming increasingly quiet, rather than face the "strange," I adopted a rescue puppy. It's certainly not quiet anymore. Perhaps, I should have embraced this change instead.

Then, last summer I made a trip back to Wisconsin's Holyland to give a talk at the Malone Area Heritage Museum. I was amazed by the many changes in the region since the last time I had visited to do research for my PhD dissertation ten years earlier. Whereas once the steeples of the churches dominated the landscape, now wind turbines have overwhelmed the region. Changes in the economy, residents, and cultural landscape left me with mixed emotions, but they have inspired me to explore the cultural geography of the area once again.

Given the changing economy in Wisconsin's Holyland and beyond, we need to ask ourselves how we should prepare future cultural geographers to be competitive in the job market while still carrying on in the subfield they prefer. I have heard colleagues say that there are very few job opportunities for students who choose to specialize in cultural geography. Having worked with an amazing team of people on the Enhancing Departments and Graduate Education (EDGE) project since 2005, I have had the opportunity to engage with students, recent alumni, faculty, staff, administrators, and employers of geographers on issues related to preparing geographers for careers in academia, business, government, and nonprofit organizations (www.aag.org/edge). There is clearly still a need for well-rounded geographers, who can think spatially, work on interdisciplinary teams, and see the big picture.
Students interested in cultural geography should not be discouraged, but instead should be made aware of the projected needs for professionals who are trained in the area of geospatial technology. According to the Department of Labor, jobs in both the geospatial technology industry and in geography in general are projected to grow 35% annually between 2010 and 2020 (U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics 2012; Cimons 2011). So, if you enjoy cultural geography, go ahead and study it, but be sure to prepare yourself with skills and experience in geospatial technology as well.

Finally, I have really enjoyed the opportunity to be Chair of the Cultural Geography Specialty Group. My term will end with the election of a new Chair at the upcoming AAG annual meeting in Los Angeles, April 9-13, 2013. We have a number of CGSG events planned, which are described in this newsletter. As always, I encourage you to attend the CGSG business meeting, especially if you would like to be more actively involved in the group!

Thank you for continuing to support the Cultural Geography Specialty Group!

Lily Kong to Deliver the 2013 CGSG Annual Marquee Address in Los Angeles
Co-Sponsored by the Geography Education Specialty Group and the Journal of Cultural Geography

Lily Kong on Balancing Spirituality and Secularism, Globalism and Nationalism:
The geographies of identity, integration, and citizenship in schools

Tuesday, April 9, 2:40 - 4:20 p.m.
Bernard’s, Biltmore

Lily Kong, Professor of Geography, is Vice President (University and Global Relations) and Vice Provost (Academic Personnel) at the National University of Singapore. Professor Kong has received numerous awards related to both research and teaching. Her service as a geographer is admirable, and we are grateful that she has agreed to serve as this year’s CGSG Marquee Speaker.

See abstract for this featured presentation on page 10 of the newsletter.
“Place” is a frequently occurring concept in geography texts (Cresswell 2004). According to Matthews and Herbert (2008), place in geography is a form of bounded space even if those boundaries are indeterminate. In discussing filmmaking, the term place is used often in a distinctive manner. When discussing place in filmmaking, what is involved usually is not the cultural aspects that go towards creating place, but the appearances of landscapes, such a dry region always equating to desert, or busy streets representing a city, without the actual name of the desert or city seeming to matter. If appearances are not the determinants of place, what is?

In what is perhaps his seminal work, 1994’s A Sense of Place, A Sense of Time, John Brinckerhoff (J.B.) Jackson argues that place and landscape are different, and that time and movements are the actual shapers of landscape, not physical characteristics (size, shape, location) normally connected to place. In his study of New Mexico contained in the book, he contends the area we have dubbed as “New Mexico” was always there, even with different cultures with different beliefs and assorted surface covers and manmade structures. The factors working to shape the landscape were the passage of time and the movement of people, goods, modes of transportation, and weather systems. Its mere physical presence was not what created New Mexico. He emphasized this point through two instances past and current.

Numerous Indian cultures including the Zuni do not even have an equivalent term for the word “room” according to Jackson. In the eyes of these cultures the term was a construct of settlers who did not understand their way of life. For the Zuni and other native cultures, the open air was the venue for the conduct of their daily lives, up to and including religious ceremonies. When the Spanish constructed adobe churches for worship, they fell into disrepair due to the Zuni using a different adobe mixture than the Spanish, one which lasted a shorter amount of time (Jackson 1994). The activities according to Jackson were the defining elements of the landscape, not the physical characteristics.

The book also discusses the story of how Jackson visited a New Mexico community and then returned a number of years later. He was distressed upon his return to see how the houses he once visited had fallen into disrepair. With further inspection he then noticed that many of the same daily activities he had observed and partaken in were instead being conducted in trailers, units initially designed for temporary use that had now taken on aspects of permanency while still possessing the capability to be picked up and moved to another location. In his estimation, what had made the houses homes earlier was not their physical structures, but the passage of time and activities occurring inside them. So, when they moved beyond those first structures time and activity still carried forth.

Ralph Bagnold, like J.B. Jackson, was not a geographer by training, receiving his degree in engineering from Cambridge University before returning to his military career. In the late 1920s and early 1930s, while stationed in Cairo Bagnold was part of an expedition into what he dubbed the “Libyan Sands” (eastern Libya, western Egypt and northern Sudan) and the Trans-Sina region of Egypt. He turned his travels (and travails) into the book Libyan Sands: Travel in Dead World (1935). Using Model T Fords loaded down at times with 150 gallons of fuel, the expedition traversed the desert beyond the Gilf Kebir plateau into Libya and Jebel Uweinat mountain range into northern Sudan.

For Bagnold, his original concept of “place” was tied into areas he was already familiar with, hence the map comparing the size and general shape of the intended destination to an area he as a British subject was far more familiar with, India. He also continually tossed around words such as dead and lifeless to describe the area, which at the beginning of his journey he believed possessed little of value. He was fixated on old ruins (i.e. Petra) and adventurers like Alexander the Great while disregarding the longtime presence of nomads who lived in the “lifeless” areas and recounting long held notions of Egypt being little more than the city of Cairo and the Nile River valley.

By the time the expedition had ended, his concepts had changed a great deal. He eventually would visualize place as an area that did not need the presence of humans to validate its existence. In the end, while man can officially sanction “place” on a map for political and other benefits, it is nature that truly defines “place”. Bagnold also visualized landscape as a component of place, but not one restricted to buildings, physiographic features, and refined settings. Landscape can also be the people of the region, the climate, or creatures residing therein. Similar to place, landscape does not require human recognition to make it so. Bagnold would go on to be a leader in the field of Aeolian (wind-driven) scientific research, with numerous articles in geographic and science journals on the topic.

The CGSG has four open positions on the Executive Board this year for two-year terms (2013-2015), including Chair, Awards Director, Nominations Director, and Graduate Student Representative. We will hold an election during the CGSG business meeting at the AAG meeting in April. We thank all of those who are willing to provide service to the CGSG. Please encourage everyone to attend the business meeting in Los Angeles!

Chair (two year term, 2013-2015)
The Chair is responsible for chairing the annual business meeting; b) together with the Secretary/Treasurer, the publication of the Cultural Geography Specialty Group Newsletters each year; c) submitting to the AAG office, by 31 May of each year, an annual report of the activities, finances, and immediate objectives of the CGSG; and d) providing general stewardship for the members of the specialty group in all matters while promoting the discipline of Geography in general and cultural geography specialization in particular.

Awards Director (two year term, 2013-2015)
The Awards Director is responsible for determining methods by which recognition will be given for major contributions to cultural geography. This Director organizing the student paper and grant competitions. Directors are also responsible for discussing and evaluating the activities of the CGSG, participating in the annual business meeting, and voting on specialty group business.

Nominations Director (two year term, 2013-2015)
The Nominations Director will organize and solicit all elections for the CGSG. Directors are also responsible for discussing and evaluating the activities of the CGSG, participating in the annual business meeting, and voting on specialty group business.

One graduate student representative (two-year term, 2013-2015)
The Graduate Student Representative is responsible for overseeing and encouraging graduate student participation in the specialty group and at events held at the AAG Annual Meeting.

Balloting will take place at the CGSG Business Meeting at the Association of the American Geographers Annual Meeting in Los Angeles on Friday, April 12 at 7:30 pm. Self-nominations are highly encouraged. To nominate, please send the following information to Charlie Travis (ctravis@tcd.ie), CGSG Nominations Director by March 15, 2013.

PLEASE INCLUDE THE FOLLOWING:
1) Nominee’s name and affiliation
2) Brief (paragraph) biography
3) Qualifications and platforms for respective positions

Should you have questions about the roles, please do not hesitate to contact Charlie Travis (ctravis@tcd.ie) or CGSG Chair, Beth Schlemper (marybeth.schlemper@utoledo.edu)

Regards,

Dr. Charles Travis
Lecturer in Geography

Dear CGSG Members,

It is my pleasure to announce the results of the 2012 research and student paper awards, which were formally presented at the Marquee Speaker Session in New York City. We received a record number of exceptionally strong applications for these awards. As part of the award competition, the anonymous judges provided each applicant with feedback on their paper or proposal to help strengthen and focus these research projects.

Scott Warren (Arizona State University) received the $500 Denis Cosgrove PhD Research Grant Award for his proposal titled “Migrants in the Sonoran Desert Borderlands: Making Undocumented Immigration Part of the Official Interpretation of Ironwood Forest National Monument, Arizona”.

Yang Yang (London School of Economics and Political Science) received the $250 MA Research Grant Award for her proposal titled “Atheist Public Education Only? An Investigation into the Absence of Islamic Religious Education in the Public Sphere in Chinese Muslim Communities”.

J.J. Zhang (Durham University) received the $250 Terry G. Jordan-Bychkov PhD Student Paper Award for his paper “Making Material Memories: The Case of Kinmen in the Midst of Rapprochement Tourism between China and Taiwan”. Matthew Cook (University of Tennessee at Knoxville) received the $200 MA Level Student Paper Award for his paper titled “Memorializing Berlin’s Essentialist Past: Gunter Demnig’s Stolpersteine Project”.

Congratulations to the recipients for their excellent work! Thank you to all the student members who submitted proposals and papers and to the faculty members who encouraged your students to participate! I look forward to seeing you all at our Marquee Speaker Session in Los Angeles where we will announce the results of our 2013 research and paper award competitions. Judging is underway for these awards and I am very excited to announce that we matched last year’s record setting number of applications!

Each year we ask our research grant awardees to provide an update on their projects. I am pleased to pass along these updates to CGSG members so we can all see how beneficial these grants are to our graduate students.

Scott Warren (Arizona State University), Denis Cosgrove PhD Research Grant Award, “Migrants in the Sonoran Desert Borderlands: Making Undocumented Immigration Part of the Official Interpretation of Ironwood Forest National Monument, Arizona.”

The Denis E. Cosgrove PhD Student Research Grant supported my work on the Ironwood Forest National Monument near Tucson, Arizona. The Monument is situated on a major corridor for undocumented Mexico border crossers and marijuana smugglers, and I spent several months working alongside the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) as they cleaned up the trash, roads and trails that had accumulated in the desert as a result. To the BLM the clothes, water bottles, backpacks and other items left by undocumented immigrants are trash, but I began to see these as discarded pioneer artifacts that told an important story about the place. Regrettably, through the clean-up and restoration projects of the BLM and a variety of dedicated volunteer groups, this story is being lost. Photographer Jason Roehner and I have since begun collecting and photographing as many of these items as we can. This project (titled “After the Crossing” and available here: http://www.phoenixtransect.org/sitefiles/pages/project.php?project=045) is one part of my larger dissertation work that explores Mexico border enforcement and the southern Arizona landscape more broadly.

Yang Yang (London School of Economics and Political Science), MA Research Grant Award, “Atheist Public Education Only? An Investigation into the Absence of Islamic Religious Education in the Public Sphere in Chinese Muslim Communities.”

Upon receiving the research grant funded by the Cultural Geography Specialty Group of the AAG, I started my fieldwork of the research on language education courses in ethnic minority public schools in a city called Xi’an in Northwestern China. During my fieldwork from early June to late July, I used the research grant to cover the costs of transportation and communication. Since this is a crucial component of my Master’s thesis research, without the support of the Cultural Geography Specialty Group and some of my contacts from my pilot studies, this project could never have been completed without encountering any significant issue. The finalized written version of this project was officially submitted as my Master’s thesis to the Department of Geography and Environment at the London School of Economics and Political Science in late August 2012. As a result of completing this thesis and other required courses, I graduated from the London School of Economics with a merit class honor in December 2012. Currently I am a first year PhD student in the Department of Geography at the University of Colorado, Boulder. In the upcoming AAG conference in LA, I will present my research in the session titled “Chinese Governmentalities” that will be chaired by me as well. Again, I would like to give my appreciation and gratitude to the invaluable support offered by Cultural Geography Specialty Group.

The AAG Annual Meeting is approaching quickly and we will soon be in Los Angeles. As your Graduate Student Representatives, we would like to invite you to join us for two events amidst the many CGSG sponsored sessions at the upcoming Annual Meeting.

The first event, our personal favorite, is the Landscape Photography Exhibit, which has been part of CGSG programming since the 2009 Annual Meeting in Las Vegas. In its four years, the exhibit has showcased photographs (with short descriptive captions) from both fieldwork and also more everyday encounters with cultural landscapes. Unique at the conference, it provides geographers the opportunity to share images and stories that perhaps receive less attention in their paper presentations and panel comments. Organizers of the exhibit have seen an upward trend in the number of submissions. The 2011 exhibit in Seattle featured nearly twenty photographs. Our 2012 exhibit in New York City featured almost thirty. We hope this year’s submissions will be even more plentiful. A formal call for contributions has circulated through email, and another call will circulate soon. In the meantime, please do not hesitate to submit photographs and captions (limit of 150 words) to Nicholas Jon Crane (crane.61@osu.edu) or Weronika Kusek (wkusek@kent.edu). This year, like last year, the approved submissions will be displayed near the AAG’s registration desk. We hope you will contribute and/or browse the submissions of your colleagues.

We are also thrilled to announce that this year we will continue our tradition of organizing a breakfast event, which was well received in Seattle and in New York City. Attendees of the 2013 Annual Meeting will have an opportunity to socialize with fellow cultural geographers over breakfast. The gathering will be informal, so partners and children are welcome! Feel free to drop in anytime, have breakfast, and take an opportunity to meet and/or catch up with colleagues in your sub-discipline. This year’s breakfast will occur on Wednesday, April 10, from 8:00 to 10:00, at a location near the conference center, TBA. Please look for a reminder email with the location for this event!

Respectfully submitted,
Report from the Treasurer

The budget shows that the CGSG has ample funds to support the upcoming year’s projects. All of our income this year came from dues collected from members. Our expenses include cash awards given to the recipients of our student grant and paper competitions. In addition, we have hosted a keynote speaker the last three years and covered their travel to the AAG meeting, as well as giving them an honorarium. Last year’s speaker was Julian Brash. Finally, we reimbursed our graduate student representative for the costs of hosting the annual Graduate Student Social at the AAG. Any questions regarding the budget can be addressed to the treasurer at: sbkeough@svsu.edu

Respectfully Submitted,
Sara Beth Keough
CGSG Treasurer

CGSG 2013 Newsletter page 9
Prepared by Sharon Adams

For the 2013 Annual Meeting in Los Angeles, the CGSG is sponsoring 53 sessions, examining a diverse set of methods, subjects and perspectives within cultural geography. The 2013 Cultural Geography Specialty Group Marquee Address will be delivered by Lily Kong, Professor of Geography at the National University of Singapore.

Abstract: Schools are institutional spaces that have the capacity to serve as key sites for the production of identity. In the geographies of education, schools are acknowledged as institutions in which young people become socialized. This might occur through the production and regulation of bodily identities and social norms, the exercise of technologies of discipline and citizenship, and the struggles over control for formal and informal spaces, for instance. The place of schools within wider social, cultural and political landscapes in national and transnational contexts also deserves consideration, as the myriad influences on young people are balanced within and outside schools. In this paper, I will focus on the ways in which cultural and social geographers have contributed to, and might further advance an understanding of the role of schools in creating citizens who are variously socialized, into the national polity as national citizens (often democratic citizens, but not invariably so), as transcultural global citizens, or individuals with a strong sense of identity rooted in specific communities associated with the school (e.g. ethnic, religious or national community). I examine the ways in which multiple identities are shaped and contested in schools, such as between religious and secular values in faith schools, and between global and national citizenship in international schools.

Welcome: Beth (8:30pm), Introductions of Board and members present (Nicholas Crane, Sarah Smiley, Beth Schlemper, Sharon Adams) Not present: Charlie Travis, Soyini

Sarah Smiley administered the board elections, passed out ballots and bios of those running

Chair’s Report

Julian Brash as marquee speaker, we got AAG grant and Urban GSG gave $150, and Routledge donated $500, Brash not staying at hotel, so we came out ahead on this
CGSG contributed $150 to social and critical geography sg., $150 to indigenous peoples specialty group for talks
Knowledge communities –will talk about later in meeting

Program Director (Sharon Wilcox)

We sponsored 149 sessions at this conference

Awards Director (Sarah Smiley)

Record submissions to both paper and research award programs.
Award winners:

Graduate Student Representative (Nicholas Crane)

Landscape photography exhibit: record number of submissions (33), from many different sub-fields, with help from Ramin Zamani, Nicholas Crane, Jamison Miller, and Sara Beth Keough
Breakfast social, Monday 7-9am, Europa Cafe
No grad student session this year, but hopefully next year

Marquee Speaker Ideas

Alyson Greiner’s suggestions: Lily Kong, Kay Anderson, Susan Hardwick
Nicholas Crane suggestions: Mary Thomas (published book on girl-hood and education in LA schools)

Communicating with CGSG members

We have several ways: AAG Knowledge Communities and OK State listserve
Knowledge Communities: hard to send attachments and links, only people who get messages are paying members
OK State listserve: does strange things to people’s messages, best way to reach members who haven’t paid
Ken’s Madsen: secretary forwards KC emails to non-paying members
Website at University of Missouri maintained by Soren Larsen

Regional Representative Initiative

Originally proposed 2 years ago by Soren and Soyini to improve communication and increase presence of specialty group at regional meetings
Discuss in 2011 but nothing decided or pursued
Nicholas Crane gave update from Soyini’s report
There were regional reps who agreed to serve
AAG wants specialty groups do at regional meetings where attendance has been falling off
Can we organize special sessions at some of the regional meetings?
We are open to suggestions

Election Results

Secretary/Treasurer: Sara Beth Keough
Program Director: Sharon Adams
Graduate Student Rep: Weronika Kusek (Kent State)

Other ideas from members?

Ivan Mitin, editing new journal in Russia on human and cultural geography, interested in collaboration with American scholars
Also does not have access to Knowledge Communities…can we check on this? Says he paid full membership in 2011 and checked box next to CGSG

The works of Jackson and Bagnold and the official definitions of the two words seem to highlight the underlying state of affairs for filmmaking. Since filmmaking is first and foremost a visual entity “landscape”, with its concentration on what the image looks like, has evolved into the driving force and actually has subsumed “place” in filmed entertainment. Because the audience is viewing their entertainment from a static position, whether it is a cinema or at home, the actual location of the landscape would appear to be irrelevant in the art of reproducing those landforms. In academic settings, place and landscape would seemingly intersect but are not interchangeable. In filmmaking, they appear to be totally melded. They each have a hand in the other; the enigma is how much.

Landscape and the Ideology of Nature in Exurbia

Green Sprawl
Edited by Kirsten Valentine Cadieux & Laura Taylor

This book explores the role of the ideology of nature in producing urban and exurban sprawl. It examines the ironies of residential development on the metropolitan fringe, where the search for “nature” brings residents deeper into the world from which they are imagining their escape. In ten chapters, a range of authors (from the fields of urban design and landscape planning, geography, history, literature, and journalism) reflexively explore how many of the central features of exurbia—very low-density residential land use, monster homes, and conversion of forested or rural land for housing—contribute to the very problems that the social and environmental aesthetic of exurbia attempts to avoid. The volume shows how this contradiction—to live in the green landscape, and to protect the green landscape from urbanization—gets caught up and represented in an ideology of nature, and how this ideology, in turn, constitutes and is constituted by the landscapes being urbanized. This book will be useful for urban and conservation planners, as well as anyone interested in the shape of urbanization and green infrastructure today.

Kirsten Valentine Cadieux is a Researcher in the Departments of Sociology and Geography at the University of Minnesota, USA.

Laura Taylor is an Assistant Professor in the Faculty of Environmental Studies at York University, Canada.
