Feature Article

Using Your Mind to Heal Your Body

When you're ill or in pain, taking time to look at your habits, diet and attitude may provide insight into what ails you.

"Clearly, the more active you become on your own behalf, the more likely you'll do well," says James S. Gordon, M.D., director of the Center for Mind-Body Medicine in Washington, D.C., and author of "Manifesto for a New Medicine." "Thinking about your illness, what may have caused it and what you can do to speed your recovery, may minimize your need for drugs and surgery because doing so maximizes your capacity for helping yourself."

The following tips may help you move faster from diagnosis to recovery by using your mind to get more involved in your care.

Strive for self-awareness

Heredity and infections cause many illnesses. But some conditions are part psychological, part behavioral, and people often play more of a role in causing health problems than they realize.

Asking yourself questions can help you get at the root of a health problem and on the road to recovery. Start with: How did this condition come about? Is there something going on in my life that could be causing it?

If you suffer from chronic neck pain, for instance, there may be a connection between your pain and the way you sit hunched over your desk all day.

Look at your diet

Take a close look at your diet and eating habits as the next step in the process. An unhealthful diet can cause many health problems, including diabetes, chronic heartburn, heart disease and general malaise.

"Many people eat too much and are overweight as a result," Dr. Gordon says. "And, there's increasing evidence that obesity predisposes you to a variety of illnesses and that maintaining a healthful weight can contribute to longevity."

There are also some common foods many people are sensitive to, such as coffee, milk and red meat, as well as food additives and preservatives.

"Depending on your symptoms, you might consider eliminating these foods for a while to see if your symptoms diminish," Dr. Gordon says. "As a general rule, I suggest people who want to eat more healthfully include large quantities of fiber-rich raw fruits and vegetables in their diets, as well as a morning helping of wheat and oat bran."

Focus on the possible

If you're diagnosed with an illness, take steps to learn about it, including the range of symptoms and outcomes.

"The dominant mode in traditional medicine is to focus on the disease and all the terrible things that might happen," Dr. Gordon says. "If you're diagnosed with multiple sclerosis, for example, you would be told it's degenerative and that, in most people, the disability worsens and becomes permanent.

By accepting this prediction, the disease and your fears about it can take over your life."

As an alternative, stay focused on the best possible prognosis instead of the worst-case scenario.

You may also want to investigate alternative treatments. "If you do some research, you may find a treatment that will at least be a complement to your conventional therapy," Dr. Gordon says.

The StayWell Company, LLC © 2019
Managing Stress-Related Eating

Caregivers are often advised to practice self-care, and for many, indulging in food can feel like an effective way to find relief from feelings of stress or depression. While it can be challenging to change eating habits, there are steps you can take so that eating fills biological rather than emotional needs:

- Clean out your cupboards and fill the shelves with healthy snack alternatives
- Develop emotional awareness: consider what emotions compel you to eat and then devise a plan to address these emotions head-on
- Eat when you are physically hungry rather than deny yourself, and enjoy the food you eat
- Try meditation: simple deep breathing can be done almost anywhere, and is a more positive form of stress relief
- Seek connection with other people, not with food
- Celebrate success: remind yourself frequently of all of the positive changes you are making

If you would like more information on how your EAP can be of assistance, give us a call today at 800-227-6007.

Contributed By: Benjamin Rose Institute on Aging
Did you know... that 1 in 10 people will deal with depression at some time in their lives?

(Centers for Disease Control and Prevention)

Most people experience ups and downs in life. Sadness is a normal reaction to events such as the loss of a loved one or a setback at work. But if feelings of emptiness or despair take hold and are interfering with your ability to function or enjoy time spent with friends or family, you may be experiencing depression. Sometimes it’s hard to identify depression while you’re experiencing it. Seek help if you are experiencing any of the following symptoms:

- Difficulty concentrating, remembering details and making decisions
- Feelings of guilt, worthlessness, pessimism and/or helplessness
- Insomnia or excessive sleepiness
- Loss of interest in activities or hobbies you previously enjoyed
- Overeating or appetite loss
- Thoughts of suicide or suicide attempts

IMPACT offers confidential professional counseling as well as depression and suicide awareness information on the web where you will find resources, assessment tools, fact sheets, and guidance on how to get help.