I wouldn’t be where I am today without having attended Kent State Ashtabula.”

He graduated from Kent State Ashtabula Summa Cum Laude with a Bachelor of Arts (Double Major) in Psychology and Sociology. Retiree Recognition

Dr. Joseph Kuvshnikov

*Associate Professor,
Accounting & Business Technology*

A fixture on the Ashtabula campus for 23 years, Dr. Joseph Kuvshnikov has been lead faculty for accounting, business and related technologies. Additionally, he has helped develop curriculum in fraud examination and entrepreneurial degree track programs.

Most notable among his accomplishments is his work internationally, which included taking a group of Kent State Ashtabula students to Poland in 2013. There the students worked with Lubella Pasta Company as consultants and presented to the organization's board of directors. Many of his students had not traveled outside the state of Ohio, let alone internationally, prior to what many of them viewed as a life-changing experience. Kuvshnikov has presented at international business conferences in Argentina, Poland, Russia, Uruguay and West Africa.

He is the author of several technical and professional articles and book chapters.

While teaching a number of different subjects, Kuvshnikov was always focused on developing and unveiling leadership in students.

In retirement, Kuvshnikov plans to continue to travel internationally and work on two books focusing on international leadership, trust and cultures.

John Stoker

Assistant Professor, English

John Stoker, who began teaching on the Ashtabula campus in 1997, is wrapping up a 40-year academic career this spring. During his time here, he taught mostly composition courses (English I & II) but also American Literature, Literature in English, African-American Literature and Great Books. Stoker also taught at the Kent State Geauga campus and at the University of Akron and Lakeland Community College.

A member of the American Association of University Professors and the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers (ASCAP), Stoker founded the writing center at Kent State Ashtabula and served as its director for 12 years. He also served on numerous committees and panels during his tenure and was twice awarded certificates of special recognition from the Kent State Ashtabula student council. One of his favorite memories of his time on campus was showing the daughter of one of the writing center tutors, to her wonder and delight, Harry Eisenhower's fanciful animal sculptures in the library.

Outside the classroom, Stoker has performed as a folksinger throughout Northeast Ohio and wrote and released two CDs. In retirement, he plans to spend his time pursuing creative endeavors he has long neglected.
