Winter 2010

The Fall Semester has been a busy time for the Center for Nursing Research. We have been excited about the new grants that have been funded and the potential for growth.

As the university faces potential financial challenges, we will be looking for evidence that our strategies and practices, both new and old, are helping us to improve our research and scholarly productivity.

On another note, it is bitter-sweet that we say goodbye to Sue Tribuzzo. Although Sue has been with the College of Nursing for many years, her short time working in the Center for Research and commitment to helping faculty in their research and scholarship is much appreciated and will be missed. We wish her success in her new role as Grants Coordinator in Research and Sponsored Programs. See you in Cartwright Hall!

Regards,
Mary K. Anthony, PhD, RN, CS

10 Tips for Handling Inquiries, Interviews
Principal Investigators Association, 2010
info@PrincipalInvestigators.org/article

1. Know who is calling and why.
2. Buy time to prepare. Confirm the reporter's deadline. Resist the temptation to wing it.
3. Know the audience.
4. Know your message and stay on it. Create a headline in advance and make it the lead point. Reinforce it in every response.
5. Avoid jargon and technical language. You are not talking to your peers.
6. Respect the reporter. Be sure to get the reporter's name right in on-air interviews.
7. Avoid "no comment." This classic retort makes you look like you're trying to hide something. If you cannot answer, explain why.
8. Do not speculate. Hypothetical questions are notorious minefields. Do not be enticed to respond to what-if scenarios.
9. If it shouldn't be in the news, don't say it. "Off the record" is a myth. Be aware when microphones, cameras, or tape recorders are present.
10. Appearance matters on camera. Dress simply and conservatively. Sit up straight. Be mindful of your body language.
