Project Overview

A. Project Description

Located on the Kent Campus, the School of Peace and Conflict Studies (SPCS) evolved from the Center for Peaceful Change, established in 1971 as a living memorial to the events of May 4, 1970. The school continues to facilitate research and the University's mission with teaching and knowledge exchange by adopting a commitment to empower people with knowledge, skills and awareness to prevent, resolve and transform conflict and build more just and sustainable peaceful communities at local, national and international levels. The school is currently housed in McGilvrey Hall within approximately 4,300 sf and has seen both enrollment and faculty growth in recent years.

The project includes a renovation of the existing SPCS suite in McGilvrey Hall containing faculty offices and private meeting rooms, integration of enhanced technology for global connectivity and the renovation of additional space nearby for more inclusive mediation services to support students, faculty, staff, communities, and the school's mission. The proposed renovation supports academic nationwide degree and employment demand outlook with anticipated growth of the school in the next 5-10 years.
